The Torah assigns the exact Mishkan-related tasks to be performed by the families of Gershon, Kehat, and Merari, the sons of Levi. A census reveals that over 8,000 men are ready for such service. All those ritually impure are to be sent out of the encampments. If a person, after having sworn in court to the contrary, confesses that he wrongfully retained his neighbour's property, he has to pay an additional fifth of the base-price of the object and bring a guilt offering as atonement. If the claimant has already passed away without heirs, the payments are made to a kohen. In certain circumstances, a husband who suspects that his wife had been unfaithful brings her to the Temple. A kohen prepares a drink of water mixed with dust from the Temple floor and a special ink that was used for inscribing G-d's Name on a piece of parchment. If she is innocent, the potion does not harm her; rather it brings a blessing of children. If she is guilty, she suffers a supernatural death. A Nazir is one who vows to dedicate himself to G-d for a specific period of time. He must abstain from all grape products, grow his hair and avoid contact with corpses. At the end of this period he shaves his head and brings special offerings. The kohanim are commanded to bless the people. The Mishkan is completed and dedicated on the first day of Nissan in the second year after the Exodus. The prince of each tribe makes a communal gift to help transport the Mishkan, as well as donating identical individual gifts of gold, silver, animal and meal offerings.

Joke...

Josh was excited. As his first official duty as a rabbi, fresh out of school, he got to officiate his first funeral for a homeless man with no friends or family. The young rabbi vowed to give him the most loving send-off, the love he probably missed in this life. The funeral was to be held at a new cemetery across town and this man was the first to be laid to rest there.

New to the area, Josh arrived late, but noticed a few workers gathering around the grave opening. The young and enthusiastic rabbi poured out his heart and soul as he gave his sermon and recited the prayers.

His voice was so evocative and powerful that he brought the cemetery workers to tears. When the service was over, the rabbi thanked the workers for listening and walked to his car. As he opened the door, Josh heard one worker say to the other, "I've never seen anything like that before and I've been putting in septic systems for over 20 years!"

Joke...

Goldie & Stan Levy won 5 million dollars in the lottery. They were so excited with their windfall that they immediately started living the good life. They bought a luxurious mansion and surrounded themselves with all the material wealth imaginable. They decided to hire a butler and after much searching, they found the perfect one. The Levy's instructed the butler to set up dinner for four because they were inviting their friends, the Cohen's, over for Shavuot. Just before their guests were due to arrive, Goldie and Stan noticed that the table had been set for eight. When they asked the butler why eight places were set instead of four, the butler replied: "The Cohen's called to say that they were bringing the Blintzes and the Knishes."
