Balak, king of Moav, is in morbid fear of Bnei Yisrael. He summons a renowned sorcerer named Bilaam to curse them. First, G-d speaks to Bilaam and forbids him to go. But, because Bilaam is so insistent, G-d appears to him a second time and permits him to go. While en route, a malach (emissary from G-d) blocks Bilaam's donkey's path. Unable to contain his frustration, Bilaam strikes the donkey each time it stops or tries to detour. Miraculously, the donkey speaks, asking Bilaam why he is hitting her. The malach instructs Bilaam regarding what he is permitted to say and what he is forbidden to say regarding the Jewish People. When Bilaam arrives, King Balak makes elaborate preparations, hoping that Bilaam will succeed in the curse. Three times Bilaam attempts to curse and three times blessings issue instead. Balak, seeing that Bilaam has failed, sends him home in disgrace.

Bnei Yisrael begin sinning with the Moabite women and worshipping the Moabite idols, and they are punished with a plague. One of the Jewish leaders brazenly brings a Midianite princess into his tent, in full view of Moshe and the people. Pinchas, a grandson of Aharon, grabs a spear and kills both evil doers. This halts the plague, but not before 24,000 have died.

SUNDAY MORNING MINYAN

There will be a Sunday Morning Minyan this Sunday at 8:30 am.

The bank transaction...

Barbara goes into Bank Leumi to cash a cheque. When she gets to the front of the counter, she presents the cheque to the cashier and says, "I would like to cash this cheque from my husband, please."

The cashier looks at the cheque and says to her, "Madame, could I ask you for an endorsement on the back."

"Of course," replies Yvonne.

She then takes out her pen, turns the cheque over, and writes, "My husband Morris is a wonderful and loving husband. He's very caring and honest, he loves his grandchildren, and he regularly donates money to the United Jewish Appeal."

Thought for today...

"The problem with socialism, is that you eventually run out of the other people's money."
Margaret Thatcher
